Facebook for photo-editing The easiest way to edit photos is to simply upload them to Facebook. After uploading the image to your Wall, it is at your disposal for use as your main image. If someone likes the image and comments on it, you can click on the Like button, which will serve as a thumbnail of the image that is displayed when you click on the Wall tab of your Wall. By clicking on the thumbnail, you can view the full-size photo and then share your image with others. To edit a photo on your Wall before you upload it to your profile, click on the Edit this Photo link. This gives you the option to make slight edits to the photo and change various settings. These editing tools, such as rotating, cropping, and resizing, are easy to use, and you can make a wide variety of changes without any specific knowledge of Photoshop. You can also use the Edit tab, which enables you to paint directly onto the photo using any color from the color palette. You can also create a video that is integrated into a photo. Facebook users have the option to make multiple video thumbnails from one photo. To create a video thumbnail, click on the Create Video Thumbnail link. The page that opens enables you to resize the photo, and crop the

Q: R (Psyco) python multiprocessing pool executes a function twice for one iteration I am doing some parallel processing in Python using Psyco (in conjunction with R). When I run the following function from the multiprocessing library (1.0, rather than the current 1.1):

    pool.map_async(numpy.sqr, x, n_jobs=-1)

it behaves as though it were executing twice for each x in the data frame. If I set the n_jobs value to 0 the function runs only once for each x. Am I doing something wrong here or is this due to R/numpy (unlikely, I know)?

A: This is a known issue, where you hit the "thread from outside" bug. It happens when you initialize the PsycoContext and then use it from multiple threads (the thread you use to "initialize" PsycoContext). The solution is to be very careful with things like using global variables, GIL and pools.

Nonsense-mediated mRNA decay in Drosophila. Nonsense-mediated decay is responsible for the clearance of transcripts in eukaryotic cells that have an in-frame termination codon. In most cases this occurs because the transcript is no longer functional due to a premature termination codon within a transcript or by the presence of a structural RNA element. Here we will give a short introduction to the mechanism of nonsense-mediated decay in Drosophila, and highlight how the study of this pathway can contribute to our understanding of the many conditions in which mRNA degradation is dysregulated. Hi all, Since my last post, I was able to install Virtualmin on a test server to test the functionality of the module. I have not been able to successfully deploy to the main server. I suspect this is because of DNS issues. I deployed the virtualmin.fcgi script to the default Virtualmin app pool in IIS and it responded properly, but when I attached the web browser I was unable to load the website. I then tried to use localhost and this resulted in the browser loading the Virtualmin test page that hosts the script. I then changed the virtual server's ip address to that of the main server and there was no success. Is there anyway of troubleshooting this? (04-04-2010 09:48 PM
